

Beware the Charletons by Gary Bate

When you examine the revenue and the expenditure, it's clear what the motive is behind the promise that never delivers. It can never deliver in that way and the promisor knows that.

The divine light and how one can only get there by having a guru, epitomises the filth of these men and women. Not only is the so-called divine light a trap of reincarnation; the servitude to the guru guarantees their devotees stay entrapped.

Let me be clear – it is a grave mistake to be in servitude to anyone.

The gurus hide behind their charities, but just examine their books and you see they are the main beneficiary. Their lavish lifestyles attest to their success but their success at what? Their success is at lining their own pockets whilst the gullible serve them and help them to do so.

The self-importance one feels from devotion to a 'divine man' with a promise of peace, is enough to get the devotee to spend their time and money on the cause, thereby increasing the bottom line of this long-line of filth.

Ironically, these gurus are notorious for drunkenness, drug-taking and receiving sexual favours. Sai Baba was known for 'liking' young boys. There are long-lines of this filth going back in history. Some of them even change their names and manipulate the media to try and distract from their past.

Anyway, suffice to say that I find these 'teachers' despicable.

You are not here to serve anyone or devote your life to anyone – that's slavery. It might feel good and you might feel important; but the truth is more important.

You are not here to be tested by anyone or any organisation; just prove truth to yourself.

You are not here to find acceptance amongst others; just accept yourself and love yourself.

You are not here to seek anyone's approval for nobody is superior to you.

You are not here to live a pretence just to satisfy a demon who hangs onto you.

You are not here to find recognition; you already have that just by being alive.

There's life in you; it's called God. It allows you to live and express yourself howsoever you want. It allows you to believe what you want. It allows you to be as limited as you want. It allows you to know as much as you want to know. It loves you without conditions. It doesn't look out for you or care for you or help you in your chosen suffering or anything like that. It doesn't get involved in your dramas. It just observes how you choose to live and allows it all.

People who manipulate to intercede in life are charletons. Their interest is in furnishing themselves.

A genuine person is someone who helps you to empower yourself and that starts by your understanding and acceptance of your true nature. They will never get you to serve them or volunteer for them or donate to them.

I am saddened by the vast numbers of gullible people on this planet ~ Gary Bate.
