

Create the Stall by Gary Bate

When I listen to Dane at geoengineeringwatch.org I am constantly shocked by the magnitude and speed at which our biosphere has collapsed and continues to do so. We cannot reverse this demise because the 'geo-engineers' continue with their destructive activities. It's enough to fill all of us with dread and fear. When we add to this all of the other bad 'news', it becomes very difficult to find joy in what is known. So we must venture into the unknown...

The known is what's already happened (the past) and the unknown is the future. We may or may not have had an exciting past; but we can become excited about the future, if we have our hand (minds) in its design. We know that our lives and our emotional states are coming directly from our minds and how we perceive things, so therein we must do our work.

If we try to design a future that's too specific then we leave no room for pleasant surprises and we run the risk of creating our future from a mind that was built upon our past. We must create the stall and let the 'universe' fill it for us!

If we create the stall with solid legs it will hold more than we could ever want; so let's make that the first leg - "I always get what I want"

My second leg is going to be one of my book titles, "I only have beautiful experiences". Please note that I am not being specific and in do so I leave myself open to offers.

"I am always able-bodied" is an important one for me and maybe it is for you too? My third leg.

"I am always in the right place at the right time" could keep both me and you out of harms way...

"I am healthy, fit and strong" are you? How many more legs will your stall have?

The future is unknown and offers us the most exciting adventure but we have to build the stall for it.

This isn't conjecture. We know that what takes form comes from what we commonly think, so the trick is to make our common thinking extraordinary.

We have to wire it neurologically and we do this with regular repetition – as soon as you rise and before you sleep and every moment you remember, like when you're driving your car. The proof is you as only you can prove or disprove this to yourself, by doing it. You'll know when your new 'neuronets' are embedded, it's when you automatically correct your mind with one of your truths...

How can we fear the biosphere collapsing when we're always in the right place at the right time?

We must take charge of our future by making the most beautiful stall for God to fill. Now we know what it means by 'ask and it will be given'.

"I am fully-loaded. I've always got more than I need."

Of course you can change or modify your legs as often as you like, but remember it takes a few weeks of repetition to embed the reality ~ Gary Bate.

Just let me know if you want to be added or removed from my list – gary@whatstress.com

<https://www.whatstress.com/>