

Waypoints by Gary Bate

We programme a Sat Nav to take us to an unknown destination but we don't do that with our lives – why is that? Because we have been programmed to die and to feel lost along the way.

We focus our power to try and control others yet we give no time to empowering ourselves. I find that extremely ironic.

Everyday I'm asked to rievew something I've purchased and today I've been asked to nominate someone for a silly reward! I do not let others take my mind with their distracting questions.

My destination has my appointed name to it and it doesn't matter how long it takes me to get there, because I know my Spirit will keep me alive in order to achieve my destiny. What's your destiny?

I have programmed 'Waypoints' along the way, but it doesn't matter what order I do them in; just that I get to them all. My tank is full and I have enough energy left.

Last night I said goodbye to a strange looking entity. Interestingly, I knew who he was. He was the cripple/victim who has been shadowing me all of my life. He surfaced because of the strength of my Waypoints and my determination to complete my journey.

Your life's journey is the most important you'll ever do, so please don't leave anything to chance (blind fate). Who said that you cannot design your own life?

If you design a new life then there's no need to be re-born into one – living by your own design is your rebirth. Don't create Waypoints that you can't accept otherwise you'll never get there.

I have 2 dozen Waypoints and I sometimes re-jig a few of them as new information presents itself. As you know, the weather is unpredictable these days; so it's always good to modify one's route.

The route becomes the most important thing because the route is the life yet to unfold and the life validates the route. If it's not on the route it shouldn't be in the life. You can always modify a point.

Don't set off with a dirty bike or car. We never want to carry the dirt from our past with us. We want a clean start because we're creating a new life. We draw a line under the past and move on...

The Quantum Field responds to your programme (the Waypoints); whether you put them there with a little conscious effort or you rely on all of your past conditioning. Said another way – you either get your consciously programmed destiny or you get the default one of the victim/cripple.

Believe me it's best to have your own destiny, even if you're unsure about the route – you can make it up as you go along and modify your Waypoints as often as you like. I've made my route 'public' so anyone can see it. I like to gift unconditionally...

Here are my starting Waypoints:

I am the luckiest guy in the World
I am always in the right place at the right time
I always find resolution to issues I have with other people

Email or Message me if you want the full route.
